

Bosnia After the War

A film about a generation raised in war and the struggle to recover in a beautiful complex country.

THE EXPERTS

Peggy Barry, Wife of Ambassador Robert Barry

“We feel very strongly that this was not either a religious war or an ethnic war. It was a carefully manipulated confrontation put into effect by some very evil men.”

Robert Barry, Ambassador, OSCE

“I don’t think the politicians here care about economic reform. They would rather keep control of the economy and use it for political patronage.”

Sheri Rosenberg, Lawyer, Human Rights Chamber

“Refugee return is just a small piece of the problem. Return is step one. What’s step two? I don’t know.”

Greg Auberry, Country Director, Catholic Relief Services

“The issue in Bosnia, much like other countries in Central and Eastern Europe, is economic development and political transition. But what is different is the war they had here.”

Pam Bell, Psychologist, Brussels, Belgium

“The fact that I was working with all local people meant that everyone I was working with was traumatized.”

Susan Sterchi, Physical Therapist, Project Hope

The one thing that we all agree on is that Bosnia changes you. It changes the way you thought you related to race and ethnicity. You’re challenged on that every minute of every day.”
